

them not at liberty to show all the newspapers & letters only forward them when opportunity offers - I would stop. The Belfast people wonder that Remond never writes to them - They were very kind & generous to him when he made such protestations but closeness and not gratitude is Remond's forte and his letters are cut into pieces and therefore no great loss - The W. P. N. Irish Land & Ocean the Herald which contains the dispraise of her - so he need not trouble himself by sending it out but has to the charge of two pence for the presentation copy - Did I say that in two or three days Jane Kenney's note is in Dublin - I have never seen her - but I feel desire to, (see P. 2.) for I have heard so much of her dash & energy. The whole family are beyond the common and are deemed amongst their neighbours no better than food for hell fire being dreamers or venturers or something of that kind
